Composition on Coffee.

Curra Pelfrey, a daughter of the late Thomas Pelfrey, of this place, and now an inmate of the Masonic Home, at Louisville, has the following composition on "coffee" in the last issue of the Masonic Home Journal: "Coffee is made from the berries of a tree called the coffee tree. This tree grows in some of the best countries of the world, such as Brazil, Cuba, Arabia and Java. The best coffee comes from Arabia, but most of the coffee that is used in this country comes from Brazil. The coffee plant is a beautiful little tree. It grows sometime to the height of twenty feet. It has smooth, dark leaves, long and pointed. Its fruit looks a little like a cherry, and within it are the coffee berries, two in each burr. When ripe the red fruit turns to a deep purple. Coffee is now used in all parts of the world. Before using, the coffee must be ground into powder to take out its fine flavor and sweet smell."

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a humming sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists, 75c.

A Young Napoleon of Finance.

A precocious youth of this town, aged six years or thereabouts, is threatening to bring suit against his maternal uncle for the sum of one dollar and ten per cent. claimed as interest on the amount alleged to have been loaned. The young American held a note for the amount, which was signed for his pa by his ma, but a few days since destroyed the document and now regrets that he was so "fisty" in tearing up the paper," as he expresses it. Litigants will watch the outcome of this legal proceeding with unusual interest owing to the novelty of the case, unless it should be amicably settled by arbitration, and as the sympathy of the community is with the young Napoleon of finance he will doubtless win his suit in any event. If the case goes to court it will probably be ducketed, "Herald Pieratt, plaintiff, versus H. F. Pieratt, defendant, and as Mrs. Pieratt signed the note she will be made a party to the suit. The plaintiff being the protégé of his grandparents may involve them also, and time only can tell how the trial may terminate.

THE FARMING WORLD.

ABOUT FARM DAIRYING.

Prof. Wm. of Cornell University, thinks of it.

Many think that the creamery butter is better than can be made on the farm.

This is entirely erroneous. Not only is it perfectly possible to make as much butter on the farm as can be made, but it is a matter of no great difficulty to do so. It does not require an expensive or elaborate equipment. The principles governing the manufacture of good butter are the same in either case; and observance will result in good butter on the farm just as surely as the perfect will result in so in the creamery. That this is so is seen in the fact that numerous private dairymen, who recognized these principles, are selling more for their butter made up in a small way in a private dairy than given for the very best grades of butter. Indeed, from the fact that the private dairymen can control the cows, their feed and care, and the milk from the time it leaves the cow until the finished product goes on the market, they can make a butter of more uniform product than the factory man, who cannot control these important conditions. Notwithstanding the possibilities of the case, the facts are that today the creameries made on the farm is sold for a few prices than that made in creameries. Let us look for a moment at some of the reasons for this condition of affairs.

In the first place, there is a large amount of butter made on farms that is not good to begin with, and justly does not bring any more than it usually does. This sort of butter is made when the cows and butter making are not so good as they should be. The milk and butter must meet the demands of all the other farm and household work before they receive attention. It is made where the maker is ignorant, careless and dirty. The cows are milked at the convenience of the farmer, and the milk is strained and put into the creamery at some indefinite time thereafter, when the hired girl is ready. Sometimes the cream is removed in 24 hours, and some times not for four days. In hot weather the cream gets so sour, and in cold, it sometimes never gets sour at all. It is churned at a temperature sometimes below, but often too high, and never properly worked. The butter is not completely removed, salt is added by guess, and it is worked by hand strength till the dairy maid gets tired. During the whole process it associates more or less intimately with the cooked and uncooked food in the family pantry, and the wonder is, not that it is bad, but that it is as good as it is.

BICYCLES AND ROADS.

Indirectly the Wheeling Race Will Be of Value to Farmers.

It is estimated that 500,000 bicycles will be sold the present year, to such enormous proportions has the craze for the "wheel" attained. I do not suppose that any great number of these will go into the hands of farmers, and yet the farmer is likely to be greatly benefited by this piece of mechanism in any class of citizens, for while country people have for generations been struggling along over poor, rough and badly made roads, no sooner has this great army of bicyclers arisen than there has been a concerted movement all over the country for better roads. Never before has public attention been so sharply drawn to the matter of the wretched highways, and, what is more to the purpose, substantial progress has been made, not only in arousing public opinion, but in actually forcing a beginning to be made in scientific road construction. In many instances states have taken hold of the matter and are constructing state highways, while elsewhere counties have undertaken the same work. Nothing succeeds so well as the success, and the experience with these new roads is sure to lead to the building of others near them, and so the good work will spread.—Practical Farmer.

FROST-PROOF PUMP.

A Box That Will Prevent Freezing Even in Very Severe Weather.

A box of the right size and shape is secured, and, with one end removed, is set about the pump and firmly fastened to the platform. The over is hinged to form the front, and a longer spout is used instead of the one that belongs to the pump. This spout can be hoisted out of a place in the few no nois. The inboard of about the pump will keep it from freezing, even in very severe weather. The door to the box shuts snugly, and other carners let in the cold air.—George J. J. Farmer.

Here, dry air and a low temperature are required for pears.

FRUIT BARK BEETLE.

Although a Recent Importation It Has Done Much Harm.

This insect is comparatively new to the farmer, and fruit growers of the United States, having been known in this country less than 20 years. It has been a serious pest to various kinds of fruit trees in Germany for over 50 years, and was found working upon fruit trees in the vicinity of Elmira, N. Y., in 1877. It has gradually spread in all directions, especially through the south and central west. It was observed in large numbers in orchards in South Carolina in 1885-86, and was very common to fruit trees in Illinois in 1888. Two years later it was found in Indiana, and is now well established throughout the central Mississippi valley.

My attention has been called to it many times during the present year, in orchards throughout central and southern Illinois. It is becoming a very troublesome pest, and many orchardists are becoming greatly alarmed. It does not attack the leaves to fruit trees, but is found working on shade and ornamental trees as well; usually the maple, elm and mountain ash.

The beetle will attack perfectly healthy trees, but has a decided preference for weak and sickly ones. A tree infested with this insect can be easily detected by a little careful observation. The trunk and larger branches are usually peppered full of tiny round holes, about the size of a pin head, as shown in the accompanying illustration at Fig. 2. In many instances the gummy excretion from these punctures is very conspicuous, standing out in bead-like form, or running down the branches and trunk. I have seen many trees, especially cherry, in this condition the present season. The little beetle responsible for this mischief is about one-tenth of an inch in length and one-third as wide. It is a very small, thin, brown, somewhat cylindrical insect in general form, and under a glass of moderate power shows a clothing of yellowish hairs on the head and wing covers. The head is vertical and the jaws are short and stout.

The young, which hatch from these eggs, feed upon the inner bark, and avoid, making long channels running in all directions from the central groove. These young worms frequently become so numerous as to completely girdle the branch or trunk as the case may be. The young have no feet, and are white, with small brown heads, of the general shape shown in Fig. 3. They transform in these channels, and in due time the adults cast their way out, the male making more openings similar to the ones made by the female when depositing her eggs. There are probably two broods each year. One brood deposits its eggs in September and the larvae pass the winter as larvae or worms under the bark. These transform in the spring, and begin to emerge as adults as early as the middle of March. I have also found full grown beetles the last of July.

The fact that the fall brood passes the winter in the larvae state, the first remedy that suggests itself, is the cutting down and destruction, by burning, of all infested trees during the winter. I would recommend this procedure only in extreme cases or where the trees are of no special value. An attempt at extermination would mean the absolute destruction of every tree showing even the least attack. Experimentation with various sprays and washes for controlling this pest has not been carried forward very rapidly. Trees sprayed with a strong solution of Bordeaux mixture and Paris green combined, at about double the strength which is generally used, have given very promising results. The first application should be made about April 1 and the second two weeks later. In order to be most effective, the spraying should be done before any of the characteristic marks of the insect are found upon the trees, and it will be most difficult to prevent the attack that to destroy the beetle after they have once entered the tree.—Prof. W. U. Johnson, in Western Rural.

Annual Loss From Poor Roads.

Gen. Roy B. Stewart, government engineer in charge of the department of road inquiry, said at the National Good Roads conference at Asbury Park last year that there are about 500,000 tons of freight hauler over roads every year on the United States, and 60 per cent of the cost of doing it was due to bad roads. He believed that the loss from poor roads in this country would aggregate no less than $925,000,000 annually.

The Snake Had the Best of It.

A Quaker driving a single horse chased up a narrow lane happened to meet a young man who was also in a single horse chase. There was not room enough for them to pass each other, unless one of them would back his carriage, which both refused. "I'll not make way for you," said the young fellow, with an oath. "I think I am older than thou art," said the Quaker, "and therefore have a right to expect thee to make way for me." "I won't," returned the first. He then pulled out a newspaper and began to read, as he sat still in his chaise. The Quaker, observing him, pulled out a pipe and some tobacco from his pocket, lighted his pipe, and sat and puffed away very comfortably. "Friend," said he, "when thou hast read that paper I should be glad if thou wouldst lend it to me." The young man gave up the contest.

HERBAGE FOR PENNSYLVANIA.

The farmers of Pennsylvania are to be congratulated. M. M. Luther, East Troy, Pa., grew over 200 bushels Salzer's Silo-Mo-Qui. Now there are thirty thousand farmers going to try and beat Mr. Luther and win $200 in gold! and they'll do it. Will you?

Then there is Silver King barley, cropped on poor soil 110 bushels per acre in 1893. Isn't that wonderful—and corn 250 bushels and potatoes and grasses and clovers, fodder plants, etc., etc. Freight is cheap to all points.

IF YOU WILL CUT THIS OUT AND SEND it with the postage to the John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis., you will receive their mammoth catalogue and ten packages grains and grasses, including about oats, free.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

We are authorized to announce CHAS. T. BYRD, of Campton, as a candidate for the office of Circuit Court Clerk for Wolfe county, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

LACONIC LIVE NEWS.

The murder of Pearl Bryan in or near Newport, Ky., on the night of January 31 or the morning of February 1, was probably the most diabolical deed ever committed on Kentucky soil, "dark and bloody ground" though it be. Scott Jackson, her alleged betrayer, and his accomplice, Alonzo Walling, are supposed to have murdered the girl in cold blood, after which they cut off her head, which they hid and which has not yet been found. Will Wood, a cousin of the dead girl, has also been arrested for complicity in the crime, and the detectives and police are following up every clue that is likely to bring the perpetrators of the deed to just and prompt punishment, but so far nothing but circumstantial evidence has been produced against the trio. This, however, is so very strong in every thread of the testimony as to leave no doubt as to the guilt of the parties accused. After unconscious work day and night for ten days, the police have been able to locate and get a confession from the cabman who drove the party across the river from Cincinnati, and it is now thought they will be brought to speedy trial in Campbell county. No case has ever attracted so much attention in the criminal annals of this commonwealth, and now that the cabman has identified the two principals the noose seems to be tightening around their necks.

Col. J. M. Beatty, of this city, has been reappointed and commissioned by the governor, judge advocate general of the state of Kentucky, with the rank of colonel. He has accepted the appointment and qualified according to law. We know of no one who would wear the honors of this important position with more grace and ease than Col. Beatty. A gentleman of high moral character, a man of culture, highly polished, and thoroughly equipped with a good education, a fine lawyer, and with a Kentuckian, possessing a solidly hearing, he seems the very man for the place. We feel constrained to congratulate the governor on the wisdom of the appointment. It is Col. Beatty now.—Beattyville Enterprise.

Henry Brown, known to every man who ever visited Frankfort with frequency, was murdered in that city Saturday night while attempting the arrest of Lucien Hawkins, a drunken desperado and farmer of Shelby county, and the latter was almost as suddenly killed by Officer Gordon, who was assisting Brown in making the arrest. Indeed both men were done in less than five minutes from the time the first shot was fired by Hawkins, though Gordon escaped without a scratch. Henry Brown had been on the police force for forty years and was a quiet gentlemanly officer always. His funeral was attended by 1,600 people, which attested the esteem in which he was held by the citizens.

Scott Jackson, who is under arrest at Cincinnati for the murder of Pearl Bryan, is said to have turned state's evidence against his accomplice, Alex Letts, at Jersey City, N. J. Letts is serving time in prison for embezzling $28,000 from the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., of which he was the assistant auditor. He and Jackson started a saloon with the money and gambled on horse races. Verily one false step leads to another. Even the first drink demands a second, and so on until the course of degradation is run. Then comes humiliation, remorse and heartaches innumerable. But, alas, these later conditions too frequently come when hope has lost its charm.

Robert Laughlin struck and killed his wife with an iron poker while she lay asleep at their home in Bracken county. He then assaulted and afterward killed May Jones, his niece, and to hide the triple crime burned the house and its contents. He was arrested, confessed his deeds in detail, and was taken to jail at Maysville for safe keeping, but subsequently removed to a place of hiding that he might escape the vengeance of a Bracken county mob.

The Hon. Wm. C. Owens, Congressman from the Seventh Kentucky district, on Friday made his maiden speech, when he spoke for two hours in favor of a sound currency. He was complimented on all sides by congressmen and senators, and all who heard the speech pronounced it one of the strongest heard during the session.

The very latest about Jackson and Walling, the Pearl Bryan murderers, is to the effect that unless speedily removed from Cincinnati they will be hung. A call was made for 1,000 men to assemble at the jail Tuesday morning, the time set for their examining trial, and this was thought to be significant.

During a fire in a Troy (N. Y.) shirt factory on Monday night 20 or more women perished in the flames and many others were killed in jumping from windows six stories high. The conflagration was caused by the carelessness of a boy throwing a match into a lot of inflammable waste.

Gov. Bradley has sent to the senate the appointments of Dr. Porter Frather, of Owen county, and Dr. C. C. Mansfield, of Powell county, as second and third physicians, respectively, of the Eastern Kentucky Asylum at Lexington. Both were confirmed.

The twenty-fourth joint ballot in the Kentucky legislature for U. S. senator, resulted: Blackburn 49, Hunter 48, Carlisle 8, Holt 3, Cochran 1, McCreary 1, Bate 1; total 106. Who will win?

"Winter lingers in the lap of spring," and must find cold comfort in the net, judging from the whistling winds and the beautiful snow which prevails.

SAD TEMPER AND BEEF EATING.

Belief That British Ill Humor Proceeds from a Meat Diet.

A trustworthy book on the art of feeding is provided by that talented lady, Mrs. Ernest Hart, a former student of the faculty of medicine of Paris and of the London school of medicine for women, and the authoress of a list of works whose very titles are of appalling learning to the ignorant layman. Mrs. Hart treats "Diet in Sickness and Health," and, on the high authority of Sir Henry Thompson, who writes in introduction and is himself the author of a standard treatise on the subject, she has produced a more complete epitome than is revealed by any work which has yet come under my notice.

The impression left upon the mind of a reader is that the Englishman is sadly ignorant of the true art of feeding and that he eats far too much meat and too far more alcohol than is good for him. On the subject of intoxicants Mrs. Hart sets forth the physiological effects of alcohol from the standpoint of one who is friendly toward its use in small quantities. As to the amount of alcohol that can be taken with impunity she says: "There is a general consensus of opinion on the part of physicians that from one to one and one-half ounces of pure alcohol is the maximum amount which a healthy man should take in 24 hours. Translated into common parlance, this means from two to three ounces of brandy or whisky, from four to six ounces of port or sherry, from ten to fifteen ounces of champagne or burundy, or from one to one and a half pints of beer or porter. More than this is harmful. Persons under 40 years of age, in whom the digestive functions are normally performed, and who show no signs of nervous disturbance or deterioration do not generally require alcohol at all, and are healthier and better, and are likely to live longer without it. For persons over 40, in whom digestion has become impaired by anxiety, confinement in close rooms and offices, or by sedentary or unhealthy occupations, or in whom nervous energy is exhausted or deficient, a small amount of alcohol in the form of wine or beer, taken with the food, is a useful stimulant. By its influence the secretion of gastric juice is increased, and digestion is thereby promoted."

The majority take a more liberal view than the physicians and Mrs. Hart—don't lose to their detriment. There is a hint to the sedentary: "If an abundant dietary is dangerous, unless carefully watched by those who take daily active muscular exercise, it is more than dangerous. It is dangerous to those who lead sedentary lives, or who are brain workers. The great majority of our adult middle class population in cities lead sedentary lives, and it may be said unhesitatingly that they, as a rule, consume far too much albuminous food, butcher's meat in particular. The harmfulness of the food, being not fully oxidized in the body by muscular exercise, remains as effete products, and ultimately give rise to dyspepsia, liver complaints, gout and Bright's disease. "One deplored the prevalence of meat-eating in England is the ill-temper which is a chronic moral complaint among us. In no country, I believe, is home rendered so unhappy and life made so miserable by the ill temper of those who are obliged to live together in a England. If we compare domestic life and manners in England with those of other countries where meat does not form such an integral article of diet, a notable difference will be remarked. In less meat-eating France, urbanity is the rule of the home; in Japan I never heard rude, angry words spoken by any but Englishmen. I am strongly of the opinion that the ill temper of the English is caused in a great measure by a too abundant meat dietary combined with sedentary life. The half-oxidized products of albumen circulating in the blood produce both mental and moral disturbances."—St. James Gazette.

Why Were They There.
"I am here, gentlemen," explained the pickpocket to his fellow-prisoners, "as the result of a moment of abstraction."
"And I," said the incendiary, "because of an unfortunate habit of making light of things."
"And I," chimed in a forger, "on account of a simple desire to make a name for myself."
"And I," added the burglar, "through nothing but taking advantage of an opening which offered in a large mercantile establishment in town."
But here the warden separated them.—London Pictorial.

THE NEW ISSUE OF BONDS.

Republican Notionaries in the Present Congress.

Congress has been in session but a short time, yet a brief review is necessary to a fair and intelligent understanding of the present situation. When Spencer Reed accepted his present position he said among other things, that "We must, above all things, avoid crude and hasty legislation." No one has ever erred so far from the truth in the breadth and depth of a great statesman. His previous record has made him notorious as a man who would compass his ends at almost any cost, but there was a belief that he would appreciate the opportunities opened to him as an avowed presidential candidate and pursue that course of conduct which would merit the approval of all who are without selfish interests to serve. But despite his pronounced and avowed attitude of moderation and against crude and hasty legislation and the dictates of policy as affecting his political prospects, he has promoted a most disastrous course of legislative proceeding.

An obsequious committee on ways and means whipped through the house, after a discussion of three hours and forty minutes, a tariff bill covering more than 3,000 articles of import. With a like want of consideration there was rushed through a financial measure providing for large government loans and purporting to relieve the treasury of grave embarrassments. The tariff measure is an arrant imposture, intended not to raise $40,000,000 of revenue as pretended, but to gain firmer hold upon the element of wealth within the party for which its sinews of war are derived. So far as can be

BAD FOR THE WOOLEN TRADE.

The Republican Tariff Policy is Fatal to Woollen Goods.

We have shown how the tariff policy of the republican party, as expressed by the bill recently passed, would increase the cost of woollen goods, both foreign and domestic, to consumers. The bill calls for an addition of about 20 per cent. to the cost of foreign woolsens until August 1, 1898, and the party leaders openly promise to make a further increase at that time if they shall have the power to make it. On the other hand, they would increase the cost of domestic woolsens now by adding 42½ per cent. to the cost of the raw material, with the understanding that they intend to add about 30 per cent. more by and by.

We invite the attention of American manufacturers of woolsens to the effect of such a policy. They have been using great quantities of wool, both foreign and domestic, during the last 11 months. They have been able to use the best wools of the world free of tariff tax. They have imported more than 125,000,000 pounds of clothing wools. Having set out to adapt their industry to the new conditions and to take advantage of them, they are now threatened by the republican party with the imposition in the near future (if the house bill should or could become a law) of a duty which would increase the cost of such wool by 42½ per cent., or from an average of 15½ cents to about 22 cents a pound, and with "compensation" amounting to about 30 per cent. of the value of foreign woolsens.

It is openly proclaimed, moreover, by the republican leaders that they would prefer now to impose a duty gathered from the evidence obtainable, the financial bill, instead of affording any permanent relief to the treasury by its issue of "loan" bonds at three per cent. interest and for the prevention of the retirement of the greenbacks, was in substance chiefly to consolidate the loanwise miners and the champions of fiat money.

In view of these facts as well as of the further fact that the measures referred to are to be the subject of long discussion in the senate, where every financial heresy has an advocate among the republicans or their populist allies, the expected happened when Secretary Carlisle made his latest issue of bonds. Thus and time again President Cleveland has given the country the most positive assurance that he would under any and all circumstances maintain the public credit by maintaining the gold reserve. When impending financial disaster becomes sufficiently probable to make delay hazardous, the promise was made good. A four per cent. bond alone could be issued under existing law. Everything that would tend to popularize it has been done and provision is made for the issuance of bonds under a new law should it be provided in time to make such a step practicable.

The pledge of the administration has been carried out as a matter of safety. The course of the republican party with the radical difference of sentiment that has asserted itself in the senate, has not been such as to create faith at home or in the financial world. The people, whose most vital interests are at stake, do not content that pretentiousness shall proceed to jeopardize public and private credit. Thus far the majority in congress has impressed the country with a conviction that there are divided councils and greater efforts for financial advantage than for the general good. It is a matter for the heartiest congratulation that there is a strong administration to meet the dangers with which congress is showing itself incompetent to cope.—Detroit Free Press.

—The republicans "do nothing" congress is keeping so still that many people doubt its existence.—Illinois State Register.

If you have borrowed from health to satisfy the demands of business, if your blood is not getting that constant supply of fat from your food it should have, you must pay back from somewhere, and the somewhere will be from the fat stored up in the body.

 broken, I flung myself upon His and I feel what the Bible calls

It was after Abraham Lincoln had been comforted in the loss of "Fad," the bright boy of the white house, that he said: "I now see as never before the preciousness of God's love in Jesus Christ, and how we are brought near to God as our Father by Him."

What a record for all time and eternity was made by Gellaeus, the play actor, in the theater at Heliopolis. As a son of Christianity was put upon the stage. In the first performance of baptism a bath tub, filled with water, was put upon the stage, and another actor, in awful blasphemy, dipped Gellaeus, pronounced him a Christian, and baptized him in the name of the Father, the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. But coming forth from the burlesque baptism, he looked changed, and was changed, and he cried out to the audience, "I am a Christian; I will die as a Christian." Though he was dragged about and stoned to dead, they could not drown the testimony made under such awful circumstances. "I am a Christian; I will die as a Christian." "Let

There lingers on this side of the river that divides earth from Heaven, a remnant of prayer for this century, Jeremiah Calvin Lampher, the founder of the Fulton Street prayer meeting, who died last week.

I read this I salute him as more qualified than any man since Bible times in demonstrating what prayer can do. The Kingdom of God on Earth and Heavens are full of his fame.

Lampher announced a meeting for 12 o'clock, September 23, 1857, he sat in the front row, waiting for people to come. He waited for a half hour, then a hoarse call was heard on the street, "Prayer Meeting!"

He arrived; but the next day 23, and the next day 40, and from that time on, for over thirty-eight years, every Sunday morning at 12 o'clock there was a prayer meeting has been place here.

Many people have asked prayer and answers to prayer have been answered, and many prayers have been applied in thirles, not in the Heavens, but thrall's and

In conjugal life the honeymoon is soon past and the twin take it for granted that each is thoroughly understanding the other. But when they become, and the years go by, and perhaps nothing is said to make either fully understanding that sense of the other. In silent words sometimes come forth, and each interprets and it is taken as a matter of course that the two will walk the path of life side by side until the end. But the years pass, and but some sudden and appalling illness unlooses the right hands that were clasped years before at the altar of love. The one is left, a paring taskmaster, and among the words that grows that you did not offer, if you never did at all, tell her or tell him responsible she was, or how indispensable he was, or how indispensable that in some plain, square talk long ago, you did not ask for forgiveness for infirmities and neglects, and understood that you fully understood the fidelity and re-foreverness many years. Alas how many such have to lament the rest of their lives. "Oh,

This chapter from which I take my text mentions several classes of persons who ought to be outspoken; among them I find the opportunity of a young man. What an opportunity you have, you who spend so much of your time on rail trains or on shipboard, whether on lake, or river or sea! You are the story of God's goodness and His love to the world. You know that you will have many a long ride beside some one whom you will never see again. Some one who is waiting for the word of rescue or consolation. Some one who is waiting for the comforting palace of saved souls. Casual conversations have harvested great host for God. There are many Christian workers in pulpits, in homes, in schools, in churches, in unlearned places who are showing their best for God, and without any recognition. They go and come, and no one cheers them. Perhaps all the reward they get is harsh criticism, if any at all. But you have heard of any good they have done let them know about it. Let them know some one benefited by their words, or their prayers, or their cheerful service. Let them know that they are almost ready to give up their lives for Christ. They may be almost in despair because of the seeming lack of results. One word from you may do more than a sermon. You may be the chief work of their life. I remember a Christian woman said to her husband, "My usefulness is done. I do not know why my life is spared any longer." Her pastor replied, "You may have done every Sabbath." She asked, "What do I do you any good?" And he and say: I shall go home and take up the burden of life more cheerfully. Why did not some professional man come up and say: "Thank you, dominie, for that good advice. I will take it. God bless you?" Why did they not tell him so? I have known ministers, in the nervous reaction that comes to some soon after the delivery of a sermon, with no seeming result to go home and roll on the floor in agony.

But to make up for this lack of outspoken religion there needs to be, and will be, a Great Day; when amid the elders and grandsons of a listening university, the statistics of human life can state how many mothers have rocked cradles and how often infantile sicknesses, and brought up their families to manhood and womanhood, have reached them upon their useful and successful journey. And yet never received one "Thank you" that amounted to anything.
The daughters became queens in social life or were affianced in the highest aristocracy, and the sons became the first honors of the university and became radiant in monetary or professional spheres. Now the secret of all that uplifted maternal influence must be that the lady did not say so; the church did not say so; the school did not say so; but on that day of all days, the last day, God will say so.

There are men to whom life is a grind and a conflict, hereditary tendencies to be overcome, accidental environments to be fought, opposition to be met and conquered, and they never so much as had a rose pinned to their coat lapel in admiration. They never had a song dedicated to their name. They never had a book presented to them with complimentary words on the flyleaf. All they have to show for their lifetime battle is scars. But in the Last Day the storm will come and the storm will be their glory and transcendent rhythm, and their courage, and persistence, and faith, and victory will not only be announced, but rewarded. These are the men of the great American tradition, and they have been and will be made white in the blood of the Lamb."

—In India at the time of the British occupation foliated rings were fashionable. They were so large that when worn on the second finger they covered almost all the outer portion of the hand.

Within the past three years Philadelphia has laid 171 miles of asphalt and 235 of Belgian block, a total of 406 miles of street pavement. The work has cost $15,510,000, of which the street railway companies operated by electric light have paid $13,510,000, according to the agreement.

—A Runic stone, lately dredged out of Hære harbor, turns out to be part of the Norwegian exhibit at the Paris exhibition of 1867 which was dropped overboard when it was being sent back to Norway. If this fact had not been remembered the stone would probably have been taken for a relic of the Viking settlers of Normandy.

—An instance of how savages disregard pain comes from Nyassaland. A cartridge dropped in the camp fire exploded, injuring the hand of one of Mr. H. H. Johnston's porters, so that the doctor amputated the man's finger and thumb. As he seemed weak from the effects of the chloroform, he was told to stay in the hospital and come for treatment next day. In the morning he could not be found, and it was afterward discovered that he had taken up his load with the other carriers and carried it to Blantyre, over 40 miles away.

—The cliffs where more sea birds are said to build their nests than any other place in the world is on the coast of Norway. It is 1,000 feet high, and given by the name of Svoeholthunden. Kittiwakes have built their nests about and seaward for ages in innumerable quantities. They remain, from year to year on the narrow shelves of the cliff side, being replaced, like rocks, nests, for each coming season, and added to until they hang into space. When a tourist comes to inspect this colony a gun is usually let off, whereupon so many birds arise that the mass darkens the whole sky for a moment.

Arid Lands That May Be Made Fertile by Means of Irrigation.

between the Rocky mountains and the Sierra Nevada range, and extending over portions of Idaho, Utah, Nevada, and California. It is a vast tract of arid land, upon which little vegetation ever grows. Most of this land will be redeemed in time through artificial irrigation, but at present it is almost entirely useless. Very slow, Government aid has been urged in furthering irrigation works, but it has not been forthcoming. There is an abundance of water in natural form in the mountain ranges between the two great mountain ranges, if it could be systematically handled. Irrigation has made good headway in Utah under private ownership of the land, but in California, Arizona, New Mexico and Nevada the area of waste land is so great that private enterprise has made little headway upon it.

One of the unpleasant features of a desert is the lack of water. The southern rail routes in the "cactus belt" of New Mexico and Arizona. There are stretches of territory miles in extent where no vegetation greets the eye of the traveler, then ahead of him is a vast tract of land with a growth of sage brush, mesquite and greasewood, interspersed with innumerable supplies of prickly cactus. The growths in every considerable shape and size are everywhere upon the mesas of Arizona. One knows on the giant cactus, grows in solid trunk usually, the agaves, sometimes ending in one or two branches, and the cholla, which grows in a bushy form. No better use has ever been found for the plant than the manufacture of paper, and even for that purpose it is not perfectly adapted. What is now a waste of land will become the most productive section of the country when a proper system of irrigation has been devised and put into practical operation.—Scientific

Williams, a young child stood on the porch with that led from the door to the gate. It was a pleasant morning in November. There had been a rain the day before but this morning the rain had ceased, and the air was still, and when she had finished sweeping off the front veranda she stopped on the walk to listen to the many sounds and noises which she could hear in the little country town in which she lived. Ray Williams was only a sweet blue-eyed girl that cared for her little sisters and kept the work going in her father's house, for her mother was dead. Her mother that lived before her was a golden haired little creature with laughing blue eyes. She had many sweethearts but always said she would be an old maid. So one day while she was washing clothes (for this golden haired little maiden did her mother's work) a farmer's wagon drove to the gate, and from it alighted a man and his wife who had just moved in the neighborhood. They had come to buy corn of Ina's father (for this was her name). This was the turning point in Ina's life. She no longer cared to be an old maid. Mr. Williams' son held her heart. He was a school teacher by profession and was tall and handsome, with bright brown eyes, while his hair was pompadoured nicely from his broad, smooth forehead. He also wore a mustache that improved his looks very much. Every morning the happy hours which he and Ina spent together afterward. And when the June roses were just budding to bloom, they were married in the quaint little church at Jamestown. They moved to a country not very much settled, and when the baby girl came they called her Ray, because she was like a ray of sunshine to that humble home. There were two or three other children, but Ray was the oldest. When Ray was four years old her father took her to the public school on the morning it opened. She was very shy at first among so many strange children, but that soon wore off, and being quick to learn, she soon stood first in her class. Things went on in the same way each year until Ray was ten years old. Such a bright, happy laugh, and loud clasp of her hands when one eve after she came home from school her father told her she might go to the boarding school about six miles away. Ben Williams was a poor man when he married, but by skillful management and being economical he and his gentle wife, now grown some larger since the time she stood under the bridal veil in the little Jamestown church, had gained quite a little fortune, though some three years after their marriage an old uncle of Ben's, who lived in the west had died and left him a small inheritance. Everything was a stir and bustle preparing for Ray to enter the boarding school on the first day of January. One of Ray's aunts had come to help her mother sew and make necessary preparations. The eve before the opening of school found Ray in the quaint little carriage made for country roads, which were very bad at this time, with her father on the way to boarding school. Months passed away and vacation came. Ray was happy to get a week at home again. The summer passed away as usual until time for school again, and she was sent twenty-three miles from home to another boarding school, it being better than the first. The years rolled on and brought about the same events each year until Ray was 16 years old. She was then prepared to become a teacher. She taught a little country school in Kinsing Hollow. (The name being given because there was a little dip in the road at the turn of the hill where sweet-hearts could kiss each other and not be seen). One day a company of students traveling for pleasure passed through and caught sight of the little blue-eyed teacher with such beautiful brown curls. One of them finds a boarding place in the neighborhood and often were the long walks after flowers, and jolly rides over the hills when school was not in session. That winter they attended the same college together, and the result was an engagement. For the wealthy college student had lost his heart to her that sunny evening he saw her in the school-room. Many were the letters that followed during vacation. But while all this was going on the little mother at home had lost her health and poor little Ray would not leave her to attend school any more. Mr. Williams had other children besides Ray that needed an education, so he left that dear little farm home, made so snug and pleasant, and went to a country town called Daintree, which boasted of an academy, where the children might be educated, and Ray could still be with her mother. He thought, perhaps, it might improve her health to give her a little change of air and water. They had not been there many months until the little mother died and was laid away in the little graveyard at Daintree, leaving her children to the care of others. Poor little Ray. Her heart was almost broken, but there was Earl to comfort her. (Earl Huntington was the college student to whom she was engaged). Ray seldom went out anywhere now. She only tried to live to make others happy, especially Earl, for they were to be married in the autumn. She kept the home as pleasant as possible for her father's sake, but he was away most of the time now. There was the children to care for and she did for them just what she thought her mother would do. Ray was now 18 years old and they were still living at Daintree, but she had seemed very well the last three or four weeks. "It was trying in vain to find the cause," said her younger sister, but Earl Huntington might have guessed the cause. He surely had not consented to love Ray. Yet she had not received a letter from him for that length of time and a long time before, when he was accustomed to writing once a week. It was this which caused Ray Williams, who was the light of the house, to become sad and despondent. Truly did she love Earl Huntington, and this was one reason why she lingered on the walk that November morning listening to the sounds and feeling so lonely and empty hearted. Earl Huntington would have thought it a beautiful picture could he have seen her standing there. There she stood in her dress of mourning and her curls held back from her face by side combs, and the broom in her hand. Indeed it was a pretty sight, although she was pale and looked lonely like the motherless girl she was. "If he would only write and tell me the cause," she thought, perhaps he had written, and the letter was lost, as there were many postoffices between Daintree and the city in which Earl's father was a wealthy banker. She thought if he would just be plain and say he did not love her she could bear it better, but she could not endure suspense even when a child. Oh! if she only had known that Earl Huntington was wishing to be rid of her then. He had found the city with its pleasures, and almost forgotten the modest little letter waiting to be answered. It was at a grand ball where he met Beaulah Clifford. She was tall and stately with midnight eyes and raven hair. She thought the tall dark haired man looked like a king among men. But little did she know that a little blue-eyed maiden far away loved him far better than ever she would. But Beaulah's rich old aunt, who was her chaperon, said it would be a good match, and she decided to catch him. She was a vain, brilliant young lady, but a fine dancer and beautiful, and Earl did not think to look for her virtues then, for her beautiful face and form had captivated him. His father had not approved much of his former engagement, and was very anxious that his son break the engagement and marry the beautiful young heiress. It was a bright sunny day and everything seemed happy but Earl Huntington. He had risen early in the morning and had not left his room that day. Ah! if Ray had known this. He had been thinking over and over in his mind how he could ask Ray to release him, and feared she would cause trouble. The servant came to the door and handed him a letter, and he never realized Ray's worth until he read that sweet, violet scented note. It was written by Ray, giving him his freedom if he no longer cared for her. He thought it the sweetest letter she had ever written, and how could he ever forget to answer her letter? He no longer wanted to be released, and it was with haste that he prepared to call on Beaulah Clifford, not to form an engagement, but to ask to be excused from the next ball, as he was going away on business. It was with a happy heart that Ray had swept and dusted that cool frosty morning, and she must indeed hurry and get Aunt Chloe to come and help prepare supper, for she had received a telegram and there would be company. (Aunt Chloe was an old negro who lived in Daintree.) Ray had just donned her hat and black dress and braided up her curls when she heard the carriage coming. No wonder her eyes shone like stars and pink roses bloomed on her cheeks. It was Earl coming. It has not been long since there was a quiet wedding in the little Jamestown church, as it was Rays wish to be married where her mother had been twenty years before. Ray will never know how near she came to losing her husband, and how that modest little note brought back his love. Neither will Beaulah Clifford know that it was the cause of his leaving so suddenly and bringing home a bride, but she will not miss him as her aunt says there are plenty of catches this season. In after years Earl has often wondered how he could ever thought Beaulah more beautiful than Ray. Her beauty now fades into mere loveliness beside Ray's real beauty—beauty of heart and soul. N. L. Dear Sir:—I have been a tobacco fiend for many years, and during the past two years have smoked fifteen to twenty cigars regularly every day. My whole nervous system became affected, until my physician told me I must give up the use of tobacco for the time being, at least. I tried the so-called "Kestey Cure," "No-To-Bac" and various other remedies, but without success, until I accidentally learned of your "Baco Cure." Three weeks ago today I commenced using your preparation, and today I consider myself completely cured; I am in perfect health, and the horrible craving for tobacco, which every inveterate smoker fully appreciates, has completely left me. I consider your "Baco-Cure" simply wonderful, and can fully recommend it. Yours very truly, C. W. HORNICK.
